

2014 Best Places to Work in Maine

Hall Internet Marketing was recently named one of the 2014 Best Places to Work in Maine. The Portland, Maine-based technology enabled internet marketing firm takes pride in offering a uniquely rewarding and fun workplace and it's no coincidence that the firm has earned this distinction four years running.

"We are again honored to be included on the Best Places to Work in Maine list," says Rachel Bowes, Director of Digital Marketing. "The fact that we've stayed on the list for four consecutive years is a testament to our relentless focus on making Hall such a great place to work." That focus is reflected in employee benefits such as a comprehensive health plan, unlimited time off, and free parking at its Old Port location.

Beyond generous benefits Hall also fosters a second home culture to help offset the fast paced nature of internet marketing. "It isn't uncommon to come into work and find a spread from Holy Donuts or Standard Baking," says Junior SEO Analyst Mary Soule. "That's pretty cool."

Jonas Levasseur, Vice President of Operations at Hall described company culture from a business perspective, "We are always adjusting our company culture to give our employees the best working experience to match the level of service we offer our clients. We consider investing in our employees not only the right thing to do, but a business necessity." That investment appears to be paying off for Hall. In their quarter two report the company announced that revenues had increased by 28 percent over that period the year before.

The complete list of the 70 Best Places to Work in Maine and company rankings will be unveiled at an awards gala on October 8, 2014. The award winning companies will also be featured in a special supplement produced by Mainebiz.
